INTERVIEW WITH MAJ WALTER ROBERSON

Bibliogov, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 246 x 189 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.From September 2005 to August 2006, Major Walter Roberson served as executive officer of a military transition team (MiTT) assigned to 3rd Battalion, 3rd Brigade of the 1st Iraqi Army Division - at the time a tier-one unit that was operating on its own and had its own battlespace in the vicinity of Habbaniyah. Part of a MiTT that included a mix of soldiers from the Army Reserve and National Guard, as well as, later, some active duty Marines, Roberson - formerly of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion - realized early on that he couldn't treat them like I'd treat my Rangers back at home station. Accordingly, he talks at length about his own team dynamics, the internal and external challenges he faced as the XO, and most importantly the impact that taking comparatively heavy casualties had on the MiTT. Seven Purple Hearts were awarded to MiTT members during their tour, said Roberson, and one member - the team's medic - was killed in action. The majority of injuries, he explained, were from improvised explosive devices (IEDs). Over the 10 months we were there, we made contact with 101 IEDs. We found 50 of them the hard way. The other 51 we found and reduced. All of us had been blown up and shot at. Miraculously, though, Roberson himself was never wounded, even though, as he said, They tried real hard to get me. Other topics discussed in this interview include the critically important decision by the MiTT to live with their Iraqi battalion; how trust and good rapport are most effectively built between Iraqis and their American advisors; the types of operations the Iraqi...
