The Cures niece entered boldly into a drawing-room that was brilliantly illuminated, and the atmosphere of which was laden with delicate perfumes, recalling to Mariettes remembrance her former years of luxury. A young and beautiful woman was standing near a table, on which were spread the remains of a repast. The lady, after casting upon Mariette a glance of curiosity and examining her well, said, in a gently modulated voice, Come forward, mademoiselle. Then addressing herself to a man who was seated at the table, with his elbow resting upon it, in the midst of a set of glasses, and his head bowed upon his hands, I will leave you, she said to him. And slowly crossing the room she disappeared. The Curds niece, thinking only of the mission with which she was charged, advanced towards the man, whose face she could not see. I am come for you, M. le Marquis. Your grandmother is dying, she hastily exclaimed. Indeed! answered an unknown voice. These are important tidings which you have brought, mademoiselle! And the man, raising his head, exhibited to Mariette features which were completely unknown to her. Seized with astonishment, the young girl stepped back. I had imagined, she said, that I was speaking to M. le Marquis Gaston de Saissieres. Yes, I thought so, replied the unknown, smiling. Gaston will be here in a moment. Sit down, mademoiselle, I beg. Is Madame la Marquise so very ill I beg your...
